School projects

One of the project goals is to develop school cross-curricular projects for students aged 10-12. Each project deals with global competence and UNESCO's Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) with a project based learning methodology (PBL).

They challenge learners to investigate the world, consider a variety of perspectives, communicate ideas and take meaningful action. These projects are part of our "Toolkit on Global Competence for Teachers".

To develop the projects, we have created a template, which teachers can use to start new projects. It is structured in these sections: overview, components, milestones, calendar, resources and tools.

We suggest that you base the project on one SDG, include 21st century skills and follow PBL methodology.

School projects

Pembroke Dock Community School (Wales) has developed a project based on SDG No. 14, "LIFE BELOW WATER".

In this project, learners research issues relating to depletion of coral reefs globally; discover threats to the regeneration of coral and marine diversity; investigate ocean acidification; create a persuasive speech; and produce an awareness campaign to disseminate their project findings, student teams will determine possible causes and review strategies that have been implemented to address this issue.

Students analyse possible solutions to act on and how to best communicate these problem-solving ideas to stakeholders. The project culminates with a presentation of an awareness campaign to inform global audiences of the importance of increasing renewable energy usage.

School projects

Institut Viladomat (Barcelona) is developing a project based on SDG No. 5, "GENDER EQUALITY".

This project works on the situation of women in today's world: gender violence, everyday sexism, the wage gap, the pink tax, the right to vote... The goal is to create a campaign to raise awareness among students of the need to fight for women's equality in today's world.

Students make posters, infographics, watch videos, create a feminist alphabet... They have organized an exhibition in the hall of the school showcasing many examples of the students' work developed alongside the project. The exhibition has a double goal: to showcase the work done and to enable students to be aware of the experiences of women in today's world.
